

Benefits of Temping

Variety

Experiencing a variety of contracts provides more opportunities to network and grow your database of contacts and friends in the industry.

Freedom

Freedom to work when you want and take longer breaks when you need them. Project focused work means you know when and where you will be working, giving you more control of your personal life and other priorities.

Career gaps

Eliminating absenteeism off your CV and staying in touch with the current market.

Flexibility

You have the power to control your work patterns by choosing the right contract role for you.

Try before you buy

You have the opportunity to work with a firm before you commit to a permanent opportunity.

Learn

A chance to learn a new skillset on the job; just because you dedicate yourself to a specific profession, does not mean you can't learn from others in the business. Lots of businesses have contractors move around, working in different teams and always providing the opportunity to learn.

Wider opportunities

Not every company can commit to permanent positions, but taking a temporary role at a highly regarded organisation allows you to get your foot in the door. This can provide significant experience on your CV or lead to a permanent role.

Financial benefits

As a temp worker you're entitled to the same financial benefits of being a permanent employee, for example HP & pension contributions.

Develop new skills

This can be within a new sector or a new job role. For example, if you have experience working with a developer previously, you could gain new experience temping at an agency without fully committing but gaining crucial experience for your CV.
